

"We see ever more clearly the forces actively fighting against a justice-based approach to health for all. We hear a dialectic in which the collective good is placed in opposition to the autonomy of the individual. It would be easy to lose hope."

But he never despairs. As he put it in the editorial:

"It is hope and an expectation of moving toward health justice that are a core ingredient for bringing these outcomes to fruition."