FSU'S PHYSICIAN DIVERSITY

Cheers to Florida State University's College of Medicine for having one of the nation's most diversified medical schools!

Out of 136 medical schools across the nation that are members of the influential Association of American Medical Colleges, Florida State's is the only one that ranks in the top five in enrollment for both black and Hispanic students.

During its first 12 graduating classes, FSU's medical school has yielded 106 physicians who are black and 136 who are Hispanic.

That's an impressive record.

And it's a direct result of Florida State's proactive effort to broaden the demographic range of future physicians across Florida, particularly those who may set up practices in the state's underserved communities.
