Students of FSU's college of Medicine and Good News Outreach are teaming up to provide free medical screenings for low income families.

The two groups held a kick off event Saturday at one of Good News Outreach's housing communities on Bicycle Road. FSU medical students will operate its outreach program in one of the buildings at Maryland Oaks Crossings.

Folks celebrated with food, dancing and games. The new program will provide free health screenings and information on community resources for medical care.

The free screenings will be offered once a month, on Saturdays.

The medical students also hope to start preventative health programs for the members of the Good News Outreach Community.
