

Is there a doctor in the house?

Aug. 17, 2013

Dwight Kemp can't contain his joy after being fitted with the white coat on Friday. Members of the Florida State University College of Medicine Class of 2017 received white coats in a traditional ceremony symbolizing the importance of compassionate care for patients and the scientific proficiency expected of physicians. The 120-member class includes former FSU All-American football player and Rhodes Scholar Myron Rolle. The featured speaker was Dr. Jimmy Moss, a 2010 graduate of FSU's medical school who overcame homelessness and poverty as a child to become a physician.

Members of the Florida State University College of Medicine Class of 2017 received white coats in a traditional ceremony Friday night at Ruby Diamond Concert Hall. While the medical students won't become doctors until they graduate in almost four years, the ceremony symbolizes the importance of compassionate care for patients and the scientific proficiency expected of physicians. The 120-member class includes former FSU All-American football player and Rhodes Scholar Myron Rolle. The featured speaker was Dr. Jimmy Moss, a 2010 graduate of FSU's medical school who overcame homelessness and poverty as a child to become a physician.