Doctors and researchers at Florida State University (FSU) study diseases and other health problems. Our goal is to find better treatments for these health problems. To do this, we need the help of people who are willing to be in research studies.

The purpose of this study is to identify emerging treatment approaches that may help improve symptoms related to PTSD. You may be eligible for this study, which includes a brief evaluation, an MRI scan, and brief Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation (a non-invasive method to stimulate the brain). You will be provided compensation for your time.

We are looking for adults aged 18-70 years who suffer from PTSD.

Potential participants will be screened by phone for eligibility and provided more details about the study. Three visits will take place over the course of two weeks. Eligibility for studies and total participation time will vary.
